

One shared system for how your providers find units and work with landlords

When every provider in your system keeps its own landlord list, the cost of that fragmentation lands on you. The same landlord fields the same call from four agencies, two case managers work the same vacancy, and when a funder asks how long housing search takes across the system, the answer has to be assembled by hand. Padmission Connect puts unit inventory, landlord relationships, and housing search on one system your providers share — so coordination is how the work runs, not a meeting you convene.

Participants choose where they live

With the system's whole inventory visible, a household picks from real options across the county instead of the two units one case manager happened to know about. Choice is a large part of what makes a placement hold.

More hands on the record keep the data current

Landlords post and update their own units. Providers mark status as it changes. The inventory reflects this week, not the last time someone re-keyed a spreadsheet — so decisions rest on what is actually available.

Reporting comes out of the record itself

Search time, lead source, accepted and declined units, acquisition by bedroom size — already captured, and reportable without a manual reconciliation across providers.

Providers stop working the same unit twice

A vacancy one agency is pursuing is visible to the rest, and landlords deal with one coordinated point of contact rather than four separate ones.

[MAP SEARCH]

Available units across the system, filtered by program, unit size, price, and availability — visible to every participating provider from the same record, rather than held in one agency's list.

46 days

[NEW MEXICO COALITION TO END HOMELESSNESS • ALBUQUERQUE]

Average time for a client to locate housing, down from 90 days before landlord engagement was centralized — a reduction of nearly half, measured in HMIS rather than estimated.

Source: the coalition's own HMIS reporting, as published in the Padmission Unlocked case study.

"Invest in Padmission Connect, as it is a powerful catalyst for transforming the housing landscape in your community. The platform provides a seamless software-as-a-service solution that moves landlord engagement and housing searches from siloed approaches to a coordinated system."

Muris Avdic, Housing Services Coordinator, CNY CHANCE Program · Housing & Homeless Coalition of Central New York

"Padmission Connect has allowed our CoC to modernize the way we work collectively. Centralizing landlord engagement and providing service providers with a platform that stores the units and landlord contacts that are cultivated by our Housing Acquisition team lifts the burden of doing this work alone."

Breya Birdsong, Vice President of Rental Assistance Programs · RDOOR Housing Corporation, Indianapolis